

Worms: The gardener's friend

If you think that the brown material underneath a plant is nothing more than dirt, you couldn't be more wrong. It is in fact the very lifeblood of plants! Let's find out why...

Watch the film at the start of the module then complete this activity by filling in the missing words

Worms are beneficial creatures. They are for the garden. Plants have roots so they can get water and nutrients from the soil. Worms help to grow because they break up ground. Worms fill the soil with so that the can get to the nutrients and plants need to .